The Problem

Your livestock is one of your family's biggest investments — but it's at risk every day. Diseases like January Disease have killed over 500,000 cattle in Zimbabwe since 2016, often before anyone notices an animal is sick. Cattle theft is common enough that police recently arrested over 3,400 people in a single crackdown. And when you sell an animal, how do you prove — to a buyer, or to the police — that it's really yours?

Meet PFUMA

PFUMA is a simple app that helps you look after your animals, prove they're yours, and sell them safely — built around how Zimbabwean farmers, vets, traders, and police already do business, just made faster, fairer, and safer.

Who It's For

- Farmers — track your herd's health and sell with confidence.
- Vets — reach the farmers who need you and issue certificates.
- Suppliers — deliver medicine and feed where it's needed.
- Retailers — buy livestock knowing the paperwork is real.
- Police — verify ownership and stop stolen cattle from being sold.

How It Works

Diseases PFUMA Helps You Catch Early

From Foot-and-Mouth Disease to January Disease, PFUMA recognizes 15 of the most common and dangerous livestock diseases in Zimbabwe — across cattle, goats, sheep, and pigs.

Why You Can Trust PFUMA

- Your information stays private. Only you — and the people you choose to work with — can see your animals and records.
- No unfair middlemen. You deal directly with real buyers, vets, and suppliers.
- Works for every farmer. Whether you hold a title deed or a communal land allocation letter, PFUMA accepts it — you don't need to be a big commercial operation to be taken seriously.
- Built on Zimbabwean law. Not just an app — a system designed around the same rules courts and police already use to protect farmers from theft and fraud.

The Old Way vs. The PFUMA Way
